The McKinney-Vento Act

Ensuring the educational rights of students experiencing homelessness

If you are in a temporary housing situation due to loss of housing or economic hardship, or a similar reason, you may be able to receive help for your child through a federal law called the McKinney-Vento Act.

For more information, please call our office at 603-357-2042.

At Home Resource Kit
supplied by Title I

Be on the lookout for a zippered mesh bag of math supplies coming home. These are for your children to keep, courtesy of Title I funds. They contain the same tools that the students are using in our new math program called Illustrated Math. They will be handy for doing homework and when your children come home from school, you can say, "Show me what you did in math today," and they can demonstrate hands-on with these plentiful math resources.

Have you ever noticed that some people seem to be super organized, excellent at planning, and always have their work completed on time? You may think that they are naturally talented, but the truth is that anyone can learn and develop these skills.

This year, this column will be devoted to tips and activities to help improve executive functioning skills. Here's a quick tip: Make a to-do list at the end of each day. Then, in the morning, you'll know just where to begin.
